Vocational Aptitude Batteries – Multiple aptitude tests typically consists of a series of subtests that relate in varying combinations to a series of occupations or occupationally related activities. Commonly used multiple aptitude batteries are the General Aptitude Test Battery (GATB); the Differential Aptitude Battery (DAT); the Flanagan Aptitude Classification Test (FACT); and the Academic Promise Test (APT).

Scholastic Aptitude Test – Scholastic or academic aptitude tests measure one’s potential for performing in academic situations. Such tests are those that comprise the SAT and PSAT batteries have much merit in so far as predicting academic performance at higher educational levels. However, a more appropriate label would be academic achievement, because they tend to predict future academic achievement on the basis of past learning, rather than on the basis of natural ability.
